By reducing the figures to an octavo, size, the original intention of Dr Smellie is frustrated. It is on a perfect howing of the figures in their natural size and position, Dr Smelie's great plates ever have been, and most probably ever will be, the best means of conveying instruction to studens. The original price of the large plates (forty in manber, and each on a whole side of royal folio), which was only forty five shillings in sheets, is a small suns, compared with the affeitings of the work.

A diffeovery, which, from the proofs already given of its unrivalled efficacy, in eradicating those diferders, so frequent and fatal to the inhabitants of this climate, has not only gained it the fanction and patronage of the first Nobility of this kingdom, but likewise their earnest recommendation to the public at large, from a full conviction that thousands would be preserved and restored by the application of it; which honour and distinction no other medicine can boast of.—Repeatance of the public at large, from a full consideration of it; which honour and distinction no other medicine can boast of.—Repeatance of the public at large greatly enhances; its value, and makes it well worthy of the attention of every individual in this kingdom.

The following remarkable cases may appear incredible, but the fortunate patients, and many persons of rank and respect, are living testimonies to the fast.

Mis Ann Tarton, a relation of Dr Turton, physician to their Majedies, who gave her over, and, thinking it impossible for her to live, reported her dead.—Her bones were bound in bandages to keep them in the sockets, and she was in a miserable and most deplorable state of existence, but was restored by the Vegetable Balsan in a few weeks.—and has been sent for by several noble families, who are well fatished of the cure.

Mrs. Glart at Clapham, was given over as incurable by se-of the cure.

Mrs. Glart at Clapham, was given over as incurable by feven Gentlemen of the Faculty—difcharged from feveral Hofpitals, Dispensaries, &c.—became blind, deaf, speechles, and motionless for three weeks,—could receive no suffenance but what was forced into her mouth by a pipe. In four days the Vegetable Bullam recovered her fight, speech, sense, and hearing, and she has since been able to walk from Clapham to London.

Mr P. Therburn, Nurferyman, Brompton,—attended by four of the most eminent Gentlemen of the Faculty, one of whom advised a will to be made, viewing him totally hirecoverable, as he daily grew worse.—Recovered by the Vegetable Balfam in a few weeks.

Mr Price of Buckleribury,—cured at Brompton.—Severe cough, spitting of matter, wasting of siesh, and to all appearance in a rapid consumption.

Mr John Horn, Shoraidtch,—after three months attendance was discharged from the London Dispensary, Bishopsgatesfireet, as incurable—could hardly speak or walk—cured in a month.

Mr James Roberts, No. 7. Honeyfuckle-Court, Moor-lane, was in the Alderigate-Diffensiry,—could find on relief, was attended by feveral eminent Gentlemen of the Faculty to no effect—reflored by the Vegetable Balfam in a few weeks, and now works at his business as usual.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, Dec. 10. Resolved, That the trial of Mr Hastings be commenced at the bar of this House on Wednesday the 13th day of February next.

Intelligence of this determination was immediately transmitted to the Commons.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, Dec. 10.

Sir John Miller complained of the indecency and licentiousness of the public prints in their criticisms on the speeches of the members; and declared, that if the reporters thould perfift in fuch freedom of remark, he would move the flanding order of the House for the exclusion of all strangers from the gallery.

Mr Burke moved, that the engroßed replication of the Commons to Mr Hastings's answer be now

Mr Gilbert brought up a report of the last Com-

Mr Alderman Sawbridge informed the House, that he had in his hand a petition from four electors of the Port of Queenborough, in Kent, complaining of the undue influence of the Officers of Ordnance in the elections of that town, as well as of the extravagance of the works carried on there in that department, and praying that a Committee might be appointed to enquire into these abuses.

The question being put, that this petition be brought up, a division ensued, in which the numbers

Mr Gilbert made fome remarks on the necessity of raking some speedy and effectual measures for the redress of the enormous grievances sustained by the poor, from the mismanagement and peculation of parochial officers, and propofed, that as the proper returns were now made out, a Committee should be appointed to confider the fubject at large, and adopt fome regular and confiftent plan.

Mr Courtenay next rose, and after a short pre-face, moved, that a copy of his Majesty's warrant to the Master-General of the Ordnance, for the formation of a new corps of military artificers, as well as of the faid Master General's instructions, given out on the same subject, be laid before the House.

This motion gave rife to a division, when the Mellengers from the Lords were now introduced, who informed the House of the day appointed for the trial of Mr Hastings, as above mentioned.

Mr Fox then observed, in answer to Colonel

Phipps, who questioned him on the subject, that on to-morrow a nomination would be made of the gentlemen who were to compose the Committee for managing the impeachment of the faid Governor-General; and that he should propose Mr Francis as one of the members of this Committee.

The order of the day being read for a general Committee of Supply, Mr Gilbert took his feat as

The Secretary at War now opened the buliness of the army estimates, with observing, that the state of our foreign possessions, with respect to proper security against an enemy, had for some time been a fource of anxiety, rather than of comfort, to his Majesty's Ministers .- It was proper to put them in fuch a respectable state of defence as would enable them to make a vigorous relitance, in case of attack, till the arrival of fuecours. On this point, iffands, and of other foreign poffethons, had been requested to communicate their fentiments. A Board of General Officers had also been held; that they might give their opi ious on the same subject. They had unanimously recommended the augmenta-tion of our military establishment; for the adequate defence of our possessions. The Ministry had found reason to concur in this opinion, and had therefore adopted the plan of augmenting the number of our land forces. He proceeded to state the amount of this augmentation. In the present year, the namber of men in commission was 9546, and the ex-pence of them about 244,600 i. In the ensuing year, it was proposed to have 12,610 men, the expence of whole maintenance would be about 315,000 l. To compensate, in some measure, for increase of establishment, his Majesty had graciously offered to confent to a reduction in the number of his household troops. Our guards and gar-risons, in 1787, amounted to 17,638 men; but, in the approaching year, it was proposed to reduce that number to 16,982. He hoped the House would not object to the plan now recommended to their confideration, as it contributed to remove all apprehensions for the safety of our foreign domions, at an expence of no great moment. He concluded with moving a resolution to the purport above alluded to, and was followed by

ble time in disapprobation of the proposed increase. He adverted to the peace establishment of 1783, which had then been considered as adequate to all the purposes of national defence. Before the pre-fent establishment should be altered, he conceived it incumbent on Ministers to produce some very strong grounds for the expediency of fush a proce Those who brought forward this measure, on have proved that fince 1783, our establishment had been so inadequate to the defence of our several lions, as to render an increase of troops necesfary for that purpose. Bu nothing of this kind had been attempted. Our foreign possessions by no means appeared to him to be infecure. And, indeed, from the present state of our affairs, and our late success in baffling the defigns of the French in Holland, he was inclined to confider a decrease of our forces as adviscable rather than an increase. With regard to the expedient lately practice, of consulting the Governors and General Officers on this subject, he thought their opinions inadmissible. Hence appeared the propriety of a permanent appointment of Commander in Chief of the army; in default of whom, recourse had been had to the informal made which he had just hinted at. As to the destination of the troops to be raised in addition to the present establishment, he remarked, that, if they should be principally intended for the West Indies, a very material question would arise, namely, whether we should concur in adopting a new system of defence for those possessions, and whether the increase of the land-forces was not likely to be fucceeded by additional fortifications; in which our navy, the proper defence of those illands, would be neglected. With regard to the reduction of the houshold troops, that scheme might properly have been adopted without an increase of the other part of the army. He enlarged on thefe points, and, at the close of his speech, observed, that, as those who had opposed, and procured the rejection of feveral of the prefent Minister's plans, had shewn him more real kindness than if they had accepted in differing from the unnecessary meafure now recommended to the deliberation of the House. He finally moved, as an amendment to the motion of the Secretary at War, that the number of men and fums inferred in his motion, should be the fame as in the establishment of the present

The Secretary at War role to explain; after

Mr Banks made a short speech in favour of the augmentation.

Mr Baftard contrasted the ceconomy, prudence, and secrecy, of the present Chanceller of the Exchequer, with the profusion, carelessness, and pre-mature disclosure of designs, which had charasterised some former Administrations. He compared his Government to that of his father, the late Earl of Chatham, and applied to him the celebrated apothrope of Virgil,

Tu Marcellus eris.

He did not altogether approve the augmentation now proposed, as he was not sufficiently convinced of its necessity, and was of opinion that the increase of the army would diminish our ability of paying a regard to our navy, which he regarded as the fole conflitutional defence of this country. He deemed it more expedient to add to our marine, than to our military establishment. However, as he had a great confidence in the present Administration, he would not oppose the motion of the Hon. Baronet.

Colonel Phipps faid a few words in defence of the propriety of adopting the proposed plan for enlarging our establishment.

Sir Gregory Page Turner was not unfriendly to the motion of the Hon. Baronet. He rather wifhed, however, that the number of marines should be augmented, than the rest of the army.

General Burgoyne opposed the Secretary's motion. He touched on the incompetency of a board of general officers to give their opinion to Government, on the subject of a general increase of the military force; and chiefly followed the featiments of Colonel Fitzpatrick.

Colonel Norton spoke in favour of the motion. Mr Alderman Sambridge strongly objected to the augmentation, which he thought highly improper as well as unnecessary. Sir Joseph Mawbey was of opinion, that the Ministry were justified in the increase of our army on this ground, namely, that we might be the b prepared against the perfidious designs of the French. He thought it particularly proper, as that nation was now increasing its land forces.

Mr Martin was hostile to the motion,

Mr Fox spoke warmly in opposition to the motion. He hoped the House would not agree to a measure that was fraught with pernicious confequences, befides being justified by no new grounds of expediency.

He dwelt on the peace establishment of 1783, which had taken place during his administration. establishment, he faid, was nearly the same with that which prevailed in 1749, after the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, and also with that of 1763. If the number of troops employed in those two periods had proved sufficient for our defence, when our foreign posfessions were considerably more numerous than they are now, what reason could there be for increasing the military establishment at present? Surely none. Some Gentlemen had been led so far, by their confidence in the Minister, as to feem willing to give him credit for his measures, without giving them that attentive confideration which they deserved .-But foine limits ought to be fet to fuch confidence. A general bill of credit to the Ministry, arising from an excess of confidence, might lead to very impro-per concessions. He then took notice of the Hef-sian treaty, to which he had not denied his approbation. Bur he apprehended, that, as that negociation was intended for the increase of our military force, the augmentation now proposed was even much more unnecessary than it otherwise would have been.

A treaty of this kind ought rather to have been accompanied with a diminution of our ordinary establifhment, as the natural confequence of having a body of foreign troops ready at our call. . The Minister, he observed, had been said to have disconcerted the projects of the French, to have restored the true government of Holland, and to have recovered the former glory of this nation; but though he was willing to give his tribute of applaufe to the Right Hon. Gentleman's conduct on the late occafion, he had flattered himself that very different confequences would have refulted from it. The economy of reduction would have been better adap ted to such a state of affairs than the profusion

Mr Pitt, in a speech of some length, recapitulated many of the arguments urged against the motion. The grounds of which he explained, insisting, that in time of peace, we ought to prepare for the contingencies of war, and that the delign of the present augmentation was to prevent any fudden or unfufpected attacks which perhaps might be effected before we should have time to embody our militia, or fit out our fleets. He also insisted, that his attention was equally directed to the Navy; that 10,000 men had been voted this year; which was an increase of 2000 since the last year, that the extraordinaries of the navy fince the year 1783, amounted to a million and a half, and that thirty ships of the line had been launched fince the last peace. Having urged many arguments in support of the measure, he submitted to the House how far he ought to be indebred to their confidence. Mr Adam then moved, that the Chairman do now leave the Chair, report progress, and ask leave to fit again. This motion was made with a view to obtain an adjournment. The question was put, and negatived without a division.

The question was then put on Sir Geo. Yonge's original motion, when the Committee divided,

Mr Fox, who wished to know what particular force was destined to each of the West India island,

The Secretary at War replied, that this depend ed fo much upon circumstances, that he could not give an explicit answer to the question.

Mr Fox then touched on the imperfect informs tion upon which the vote of thefe estimates we grounded.

General Burgoyue renewed his objections to the augmentation of the military estimates, for which he faid, no fufficient reasons had been given.

Sir Richard Hill commended the increase; and observed, with respect to the considence which been talked of in yesterday's debate, that, if some gentlemen had more confidence in the Minister, and less in themselves, it would perhaps be better.

Lord Hood spoke in favour of the augments.

The feveral refolutions, contained in the repon, being all agreed to by the House,

Mr Buake, after desiring the Clerk to read the meffage from the Lords, appointing the day of Mr Haltings's trial, moved, that the Committee to whom the answer of Mr Haltings had been referred should be appointed managers of the profecution gainst him.

This motion was agreed to; as were also the following ones, viz. That A. Wallies, and R. Hoare, Esqrs. he appointed Solicitors for the profecution; and that this House attended the trial, as a Committee of the whole House.

Thirdly, total ab These were so firmly impressed on his mind, that it appeared to him almost an abuse of the patience of the House, and an infult on the understandings of those before whom he had the honour of fpeaking, to adduce arguments to enforce the truth of the doctrine, Mr Francis was a man of known integrity and approved merit; he had steadily opposed the malver-fation of an India Governor. Not all the advantages which might arife from a connivance at the actions of a man, whose smiles might almost prolong beyond the limits which nature intended to allow, the very existence of a corrupt or venal sycophant; not all the terrific confequences refulting from the displeasure of a despot, could influence the conduct or stagger the integrity of Mr Francis. - No! be had proved himself not call furnished by motives, not only capable of withstanding temps tarion; but also in desence of his own integrity in despising danger, he had openly, avowedly, and in the face of day detected the malverfation of an la-dia Governor. Mr Francis went out with the highest approbation of discerning men, remained India for a confiderable time, was effected by who knew him, never abused the confidence which had been reposed in him, came home with a character which had increased in respect as it had been subject to inspection. He had received the last better tellimony of approbation, a tellimony given only to those who are superlatively great and good; he had escaped the censure, nay, he had received the ap-plause of his very enemics. Mr Pitt declared, that the prefent question was a queltion of feeling, which every gentleman would decide upon by his own feelings. Me Francis was still in a capacity to affilt the Committee as often as they stood in need of his information.

Mr Sheridan complimented the House on the acquisition of two new phrases that had found their way into the House a question of feeling-and confidence in the Minister. When the majority were at any loss for argument to justify or vindicate their vote, they might fay they were induced to give it through their confidence in the Minister;—and when the Minister, on his part, was pressed for his opinion, he had nothing to do but to say—it was a question of feeling - fo that the House was no longer to be influenced by the old fashioned mode of arguments and reason; as the modern ones he had inft mentioned were found much more eafy and con-

Mr Grenville and Mr Dundas vindicated Mr Pitt. Mr Francis begged to be heard a few moments, to thank both fides; one for the tellimony they had given to his moral character, and official conduct; and the other, for the open manner in which they had avowed their reasons for excluding him, on account of the personal quarrel he chanced to have some years ago with Mr Hastings.

The country people assembled as usual on such unfortunate occasions. There was no living creature on board. - Jean of Dunbarton was painted on her stern. Her cargo was as the timber. The cargo was ladned and lodged in Hampton, and the vessel got off and was carried into the harbour of Skerries with great labour and difficulty. This is attributed in a great measure to the spirited and skilful exertions of Mr Henry Barton, of Balbraggan, affilted by two officers of the revenue from Skerries, who all acted under the direction of Mr Pace, the Hon. Baron's agent. It was supposed the crew had taken to their b had overfet; but, on Monday the 26th ult. the master, Walter Park, arrived from Milford, and gives

He was directed to Mr Girvin, of Dublin, who immediately applied with him to the Honourable Baron. He heard the case, gave them a letter to his agent, with permission for taking a particular account of every thing faved, and generously relinquished every right that law or custom entitled him to, as lord of the manor, to vessel and cargo, for the benefit of the owners, referving only falvage for defraying expences incurred and distributed among the people employed. EDINBURGH.

Thu fday died, at his house in Adam's Square, Edinburgh, the Right Hon. ROBERT DUNDAS of ARNISTON, LORD PRESIDENT of the COURT of SESSION. His Lordship filled that important station for twenty-seven years, in a man-ner very honourable to himself, and satisfactory to his country. He was particularly distinguished for the accuracy, acuteness, and vigour of his mind. The records of the Court will bear ample testimony of his great abilities and integrity as a judge. The "law's delay," fo often complained of, and the banging up fuits for years, which was frequently more pernicious to the litigants than lofing their. plea, were unknown fince his Lordship presided on the Bench. Till within a few days of his death, he continued to fulfil the important duties of his starion with his usual vigour and accuracy. The loss of this eminent Judge will be long and deeply felt country in general, and by the members or the College of Justice in particular. was Solicitor General for Scotland, during the re bellion in the year 1745; he was appointed Lord Advocate in 1754, and Lord Prefident in 1760. He was several times Representative in Parliament for the county of Edinburgh. His Lordship was no less respected and beloved in his private character as an independent country gentleman, than in his public capacity as a judge.

When the Court of Session met yesterday, a melancholy gloom was vitible on the countenances of all prefent. The Lord Justice Clerk, with great feeling and propriety, represented the irreparable loss the Court and the country had met with. After the Lord Justice Clerk's freech, the Court, out of respect to the memory of the Lord President, immediately adjourned till this day. The Lord Ordinary also adjourned. Though the eulogy of the late Lord President is best written in the hearts of his countrymen, yet, if the members of the College of Justice were to erect a marble statue of his Lordship in the Parliament House, similar to that of President Forbes, it would betout paying a grateful and justiribute to the memory of so diffinguished a character.

These accidents must be attended with very great inconveniency to travellers, &c. on those roads at this season of the year.

We hear from Kirkintilloch, that the water of Luggie rose to a greater height than ever was re-membered. The bridge over that water at the east end of Kirkiutilloch, on the road from Edinburgh to Glasgow, was carried away, and a number of cattle drowned, and several of the inhabitants suffered considerable loss.

The machinery belonging to the printfields, bleachfields, &c. on the Kelvin, Carr, and Leven, have been much damaged, and confiderable quanti-

have been much damaged, and confiderable quanti-ties of cloth carried away by the flood.

Extract of a letter from Grangemouth, Dec. 10.

"The great rain we had last night and this morning, which has micked all the fnow, raised Carron river and the Grangemouth to an amazing height. In the former river, two sloops, coal load-ed, were driven from their moorings, and carried with great rapidity down the river, but were got fe-cured without damage; and the latter hath laid oreat part of the country under water. The Canal cured without damage; and the latter hath laid great part of the country under water. The Canal has also been running over its banks, and, notwith-standing all the shuices running, and the water going over the top of the gates, there was near ten seet water in it great part of this day. It is now, however, greatly subsided."

Extract, of a letter from Perth, Dec. 12.

"This day, about twelve o'clock, the house of Seggieden, about three miles distant from this place, was discovered to be on sire: The slames ranged with great violence, and notwithstanding the raged with great violence, and notwithstanding the utmost exertions of the neighbourhood, that elegans little feat is burnt to the ground—Part of the furniture has been fared. It is uncertain how this accident happened. The furniture was infured in the Edinburgh Friendly Infurance Office.

"A most affecting and melancholy accident hap-pened on Monday last apposite to Stobhall. Two lads crofling the river Tay, unluckily overfet the boat, a very little above the Linn of Cample.— This cataract has long been considered as a very great natural curiofity; it is formed by a Rupendus pile of rocks, on which the water breaking, rolls down the precipice with amazing force, and being confined in a very narrow channel, occasions a great suction for a considerable way above. — One a great fuction for a confiderable way above.—One of the young men has not been heard of: The other providentially caught hold of a projection of the man body of a sack; and there, upon a few feet only of dry footing, (for the water was uncommonly fwelled), he was obliged to continue till the afternoon of next day; when, at a very great rifk, a boat was conveyed to the place where he was, by means of anchors, ropes, &c.

"The dreadful fituation in which he was placed cannot be eafily described; the noise of the water prevented his voice reaching the fhore, and the mul-titude were only capable of making figns to him of their inability to help him; and as the water was apparently fwelling, the prospect of being deprived of the few feet of terra firms he enjoyed, made his fituation of the most diffresting kind, and could only be increased by a cold, dark, rainy, boisterous night.—Happily, he is at present a good deal recovered."

Prepared by the Proprietor and Inventor, WILLIAM TIC-KELL, Apothecary and Chymidt, of the City of Bath.

THIS Medicine has great efficacy in all diseases of the flormach. It ftrengthens its tone, creates appetite, promotes digestion, expels satulence, and quiets pain. It is a most powerful remedy in the Gout in the Stomach, in Cramps, Spasms, Hysterical and Hypochondriacal Complaints: and in violent souty attacks may be administrated.

Cramps, Spafms, Hysterical and Hypochondriacal Complaints; and in violent gouty attacks may be administered as an Anodyne, with the greatest fasety.

It has equal virtues in many discases of the Breast, as the Asthua, Hooping Cough, and all other Coughs unattended with inflammation; and in Hectical Habits, it perhaps more efficaciously relieves that cough which is the forcrumer of a consumption, than any other medicine.

But its peculiar execulence is in the cure of that dreasful and generally satal disease, the DROPSY of the BREAST; and there is every reason to conclude, from its hitherto successful exhibition. reason to conclude, from its hitherto successful exhibition that it has specific virtues in that disorder. It has also bee given with remarkable fuccess, in the Anafarca, as well as the Ascites, or Dropfy of the Belly; and is probably the most certain Diuretic hitherto discovered.
